THE MESSAGE. THE MESSAGE.

To the Senate and House of Representatives: I minerely regret that I cannot be present at the opening of this session of the Congress. I am thus prevented from presenting in as direct a way as I could wish the many questions that are pressing for solution at this time. Happily, I have the advantage of the advice of the heads of the several executive departments who have kept in close touch with affairs in their detail and whose thoughtful recommendations I earnestly second.

thoughtful recommendations I earnestly second.

In the matter of the railroads and the readjustment of their affairs, growing out of federal control, I shall take the liberty at a later day of addressing you.

I hope that Congress will bring to a conclusion at this season legislation looking to the establishment of a budget system. That there should be one single authority responsible for the making of all appropriations and that appropriations should be made not independently of each other, but with reference to one single, comprehensive plan of expenditure, properly related to the nation's income, there can be no doubt. I believe the burden of preparing the budget must, in the nature of the case, if the work is to be properly done and responsibility concentrated instead of divided, rust upon the executive. The budget so prepared should be submitted to and approved for amended by a single committee of cash house of Congress and to single appropriation should be made by the Congress, except such as may have been in-Washington, D. C., Dec. 2.—General recommendations on legislation to combat the cost of living, labor unrest, radicalism and a readjustment of the nation to peace-time basis were the features of President Wilson's annual message to Congress delivered to-day.

The peace treaty, the president told Congress, will be discussed in a separate message later, as will the railroad question.

For the second time only since the president established the practice of addressing Congress in person, his message was read to-day by the clerks.

The president's principal recommendations were:

Establishment of a hudget system for the national features and to day by the care in the president of the problem is the ascertainment of the conomically and effectively.

The auditors should be highly trained of-ficals with permanent tenure in the treasury department, free of obligations to, or motives of congress and to the secretary of the treasury.

The president renewed his recommendation for legislation to deal effectively with "those persons who by violent methods would abrogate our time-tested institutions."

Several recommendations, some renewals of previous ones, were made by the president to bring down the cost of living. Among them were extension of the food control law to peace-times for the emergency; regulations for transportation of foods in interstate commerce; a cold storage law modelled after the law in New Jersey; a law requiring marks to show the length of time foods are kept in storage and a law to secure "competitive selling and prevent unconscionable profits by fed."

"The only way to keep men from agitating against grievances is to remove the grievances," said the president's message. At another point it declared that "the seed of revolution is a superson only have the effect of preventing them from the gripping and therefore of uneventing the exports from the country greatly stimulated by the war must find an outlet by exports to forcign countries and any measures taken to prevent imports will inevitably curtail experts, force curtailment of production, load the banking machinery of the country with credits to carry unsoid products and produce industrial stagnation and unemployment.
